HERE'S ALLENDALE

is a list of numbers enabling you to communicate with your neighbors. Proof that push-button suburbia is more than a target for computerized statements and tv commercials can be found in the pleasure of nostalgia and knowledge of our heritage.

HERE WAS ALLENDALE! These acres we call our town were "home" to the Lenni-Lenape Indians of the great Delaware Nation before Henry Hudson found his river. They occupied themselves with farming, fishing and hunting until 1709 when Ramapock Tract was purchased from them for $15.00 in trade goods and they moved westward.

At the time of the American Revolution, the area was organized in townships, of which this town was part of Franklin Township, officially established in 1798. The Franklin is from Governor William Franklin, son of the famous Ben, and gives our turnpike its name. This was one of the earliest toll roads in the country, chartered in 1806.

The town itself is named for Colonel Joseph Warner Allen, a railroad civil engineer who directed the surveys in about 1846 for the Paterson and Ramapo Railroad, now our stretch of the Erie.

Allendale was a popular place for summer vacationers and many farmhouses provided accommodations. Strawberry growing brought entire families for harvesting, but the local patches were gradually bought for building purposes.

Two churches had their beginnings in the 1870s: the Church of the Epiphany (Episcopal), and Archer Memorial (Methodist). The Church of the Guardian Angel (Roman Catholic) started in 1903, Calvary Lutheran organized in the early 1950s, and Highlands Presbyterian in the early 1960s.

Arrival of the railroad increased the residential qualities of Allendale, and it was incorporated as a Borough on November 10, 1894, with a population of about 300.

With the twentieth century came paved roads, four tracks on the railroad, and electric street lighting. The boundaries of 1894, when the two-square-mile Borough was incorporated, have not changed, but the post-World War II population of about 2500 has more than doubled.

The character of Allendale today is a product of many generations of concerned citizens.
